VARIOUS HAPPENINGS IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE STATE.

Prospects of a Lively Sunday in Cincinnat Over the Owen Sunday Law-Maumee Valley Ploneers Preparing to Meet. Other State News.

CINCINNATI, July 27.—The prospects for a very active Sunday here next week are excellent. Twelve hundred saloonists in mass convention have resolved to defy the law and keep open. The police commissioners are furious, and the people are indiguant. Many favor calling out the First regiment and putting a guard at the door of every saloonist who attempts to open. The Law and Order lengue will make a vigorous fight.

In an interview with Judge Ermston, of the police court, he said:

"There might just as well have been a band of horse this ves get together and resolve to steal all the horses they can and defy prosecution: there might just as well have been a lot of saloon keepers that or the might be the maken the might be the migh pledge themselves to refuse to pay the Dow tax. And they would do it, too, I have no doubt, if there was the same rotten jury system in the common pleas court that there is in the police court. He will at long as I am on the bench. The saloonists talk of marching down to police court in a body, with music; next Monday. I hope they will. I only hope they will."

Chief Deitsch Interviewed. Chief of Police Deitsch was asked as to his actions in case the law was defied. He said: "If they keep open as determined they will be arrested. And if they reopen they will be rearrested. If there are so many saloonists violate the law as to overburden the police force, the same cause will react upon themthe same cause will react upon them-aelves. If a great number of salcon men are brought to the stations, there will be a great delay in furnishing all of them with bonds, and many of them will have to lie for hours in the cells."

The Mayer Talks. Mayor Mosby, in speaking on the subject, said: "I shall issue no special orders; the police have their instructions, and I believe they will arrost every saloonist who opens, and that over and over again. I don't know whether or over again. I don't know whether or not they will send a committee to me. If they do I shall simply say to them that what they do they do at their own risk. I think it is the very worst move they have ever made.

A Reception at Rev. Winners. One of the most enjoyable social events of the season was the informal reception given on Friday evening by Bey, and Mrs. Two it A. J. Wiant, in honor of their guest. Mr. Eugene J. Hall, of Chicago, Ill., whose fame as a journalist is not unknown to our citizens.

The evening was spent in pleasant conversation, enrichened by readings and tecitations tendened faulthessip by Miss Lucia Wiant, the gifted daughter of this house hold, who is at home for a few weeks' vaextion. A rich treat was in store for the guests in the rendering of several racy, original stories by Mr. Hall, poems, toil of pathos, rare buts of prose, replete with a humor that was irresistible. Especially enjoyable was the "Debate," a story desemptive of early Vermont life and portray ing a succession of native characters, remarkably true to life. As a delineator of character Mr. Hall is superior, and while betening to "Denebu S" on the "Suppression of the Press," one had only to close his eyes to imagine oneself in the quaint little country school house, with the historic tallow caudie easting weird shadows met of every teacher or aspirant to attend the the listening faces. Miss Wight, who is institute. Come prepared to stay the entire always a favorite, "brought the house down" with "Courtship I inder Difficulties." After a year has clapsed the marriage is celebrated. At this time great festivals are celebrated. Seven or eight men perform a dance. They wear dancing aprons and leggings trimmed with puttin beaks, hoofs of doers, copper plates and bells. If the groom should be a wealthy man, who has presented to his wife many resents to a bride, these are carried by the dancers. The singing master, who the dancers join. The song used at the marriage festival is sung in unison, while in all other dances each dancer has his own tune and song. The first dancer wears a ring made of cedar bark. His hair is strewn with eagle down, forms a cloud around his head,

The groom presents the first dancer tears to pieces, which he throws down evil spirits. These pieces of calico which he throws down in front of the houses have a lucky meaning, and at the same time express the idea that the green, when he comes to be a wealthy man, will not forget the inhabitants of any house when giving a festival. No sane man, I suppose, ever carried an episte ary flutation on to an actual proposal of marriage without seeing the object, or, except what her pen has told him, without knowing something about her. - Sententious Magazine Writer

So much for the conclusions of self conceit. Man has done that thing. I I do, forasmuch as I myself was its dominating idiot. I, age 31; name, Francis Howland; usually known as Brother this professedly unworldly being. Francis—not of ecclesiastic brotherhood —Heaven forbid! I got the sobriquet from a trick my sisters—there are eight of them, four older and four younger than I-a trick the girls had of always penitents to me to confess, and strangers, on being introduced, took to addressing me as "Your Reverence," and that before I was out of my teens. O, and wasn't it galling? I loved the girls, though, the whole eight, even Martha the oldest, who had married and gone to the next town to live before I entered those teens, and Catherine, whom she had taken off with her—she was next to her in age-then Harriet, the sensible one, who, after our mother's death, had taken her place as head of the house. Eliza, number three, is a frisky maiden, two years older than I. She talks ever lastingly, and never says anything worth hearing, only I like the rattle of her tongue. Then the little ones-Florence, Maud, Blanche and Edith. If anything could have reconciled me to my hated prefix it was hearing them use it. How they used to tousie me around, and run races over me, and make the business of existence a perpetual scramble for me. Edith was only five years old when my twenty-first birthday came and I started for the west to seek my fortune.

And now I pass over nine years. It would be idle to tell of the struggles and hardships, the disappointments and successes of those momentous times. Suffice it that, after various ups and downs, I took up government land in Colorade, a corner of which, very soon after, was fixed upon by the ruling magnates for a great railroad center, and - presto! changel I was a rich man. I declare I've been living in an Arabian aight ever since.

I wrote directly home, telling of my good fortune, and I built a house and furnished it, and laid out my grounds and stocked them with a magnificence which accorded with my means. But here was my grand atumbling block. I mixed up in, could identify myself with the spirit of my surroundings. I was alone, always alone, I understood Adam's predicament if anybody ever did, but however deep a sleep might fall on me, never the withdrawal of a rib diminished my cither side.

Up to the day when I was 80 years old, and rich, my whole time on my hands, I had been too busy to give the matter much thought. But now this skeleton in my closet made up all my domestic society. It wasn't sociable.

Is it any wonder that I, like many another victim of uncongenial fireside companionship, was much from home? Not that I went abroad in search of persons with whom to exchange ideas. I rather think I was a tolerable wet blanket when I dropped in among those inclined to that recreation. One day, sauntering into the railway station. I picked up a scrap of newspaper somebody had tossed by, and in my lazy, aindess superabundance of leisure began to run through it.

Eureka! Here was the message I had vaited for! Thereon I read that somebody-oh, the deliciousness of that suggestion!-some man, another as yet full ribbed Adam like myself, no doubt solicited the correspondence of the wo man "whose hand the fates had knotted into his.'

Upon that hint I spake, or rather 1 wrote. I don't think a forcing pump could have got the words off my tongue though the very woman whom of all the world I would have chosen had stood there with her ear open to receive them. But could not I, trusting the "divinity which shapes our ends," so put forth my hand with faith, with that unconquerable force of will which should summon out of the unknown that completion of my being which my soul craved? I went home, dashed my appeal on paper and hurried it off to that beneficent little journal by the earliest mail. Could I wait for the time when an answer was possible? It was no easy task, but I managed to do it—and what? Had my earnestness multiplied its demands? Had the editor secretly set me off as an inhabitant of Utah-one in excellent standing, too? Fifty-seven letters the

We exchanged photographs. Did not that face which I used to carry in my every odd minute realize my very ideal? of the face I could look upon forever? Would be witty people used to send indicated a character exactly my opposite. I need more self assertion and a sharper tongue. Thus supplemented-"mark (in me) the perfect man." To prove our entire faith in each other, we decided not to see our future spouses until the bridal day, which was to be in about three months after our engagement. She being a resident of Indiana and I of Colorado, we decided upon meeting to consummate our vows in Builington, la.

How could she care for the little ones? We never any of us had been over fond of our father. but his death had taken away the prop of the house. I sent Harriet a thousand dollar draft, requesting her, if she needed more, to draw on me; and, somehow, not in this act perhaps, but in getting se near to the sympathies and affections of old times. I felt ten fold more the man than I had felt before since I became rich. Life itself seemed actually more a reality to me. After this episode it was not so easy to shut myself out from all the business of dreaming out the para-disc into which this woman was to some Unriet. material surroundings and sit down to dise into which this woman was to conduct me.

Entirely ready she was to advise with me on the preparations. One might have supposed, from the way she entered into the business, that this was a matter of every day occurrence with me. She agreed it was not best to mention the purport of the making ready to the little ones or even to Eliza. They might imagine a surprise party was on the docket. One was, for that matter. All took hold.

She and I played the mysterious, and such a jocular, hilarious time as they made of it! I didn't feel especially hilarious. Before 9 o'clock the next morning the house was decorated as for the reception of a princess. Edith said so. I grouned. Eliza planned the reception buy yourwinter supply CINCINNATI, July 27.- The remains of Gen'l A. E. Jones, surgeon general of the Ohio Militia, and an old and prominent citizen who has been musing from his Walnot Hills home since Thursday afternoon, were found in a sack in a sewer this morning. His morder has created a most profound Sensation here. Gen'l Jones was 70 years of age and almost universally known, and was not believed to have an enemy in the world. The motive for the murder is difficult to concerc, and was probably committed within a few hundred fect of his residence.

The Andrews Opera Company. "The comic opera, 'Erminie,' given by the Andrews Opera company, in the Academy of Music, Saturday evening, was even better than had been expected, notwith standing that this famous company was well and favorably known in our city. The singers did splendidly and were frequently greated with encores. The company is very strong in this opera, having a cast peculturly adapted to this opera. Many selections from grand opera were introduced, the rendition of which show the company to be equal to any opera company on the -Joseph McDonald, representing the load. -The law givers of Ashland recently passed an ordinance making the beating of liums on the streets a misdemeanor and punishable by a line. This was done to prevent the Salvation Army from making their regulation outrageous bass poise which they did by beating a bass drum. The Salvationists did not herd the ordinance and their leader was arrested and fined $5 and costs by the mayor. As the prisoner was leaving the office the G. A. R. drain corps began playing, but the membern were not arrested and the Salvationists remonstrated with the worldly dispenser of justice, or rather injustice. Considerable fun is expected when the council takes steps to annul or amend the ordinance.

-One of those disgusting sights, which for some reason are growing quite frequent Line depot this morning. A family, who for fifth and repulsive appearances is unexcelled, and who passed through this city some weeks ago, were begging from the chirmed home Priday from the State Pro passengers at the depot. They exerted much sympathy from several who gave them maneral assistance. But judging by their actions they are utterly unworthy of Thy attention and are but a set of street takes who are too worthless and tack to work, and take this manner of galuing a precarious subsistance.
